The COVID-19 pandemic has substantially impacted our way of life for more than two years and has forced us to rethink how we deal with the health, economic, social and environmental challenges ahead.

This webinar covers the pandemic's effects on politics, society and the environment in Asia and Australia. Three speakers cover sustainable recoveries and the clean energy transition post-COVID-19, pandemic racism and sexism in Australia, and the pressures on Chinese social workers due to 'COVID-zero' policy.
